CHAPTER 4

MK-ULTRA 1950 - THE ORIGINS OF PSYCHO-ELECTRONIC/NEUROELECTRONIC/ELECTROMAGNETIC WEAPONS AND MIND CONTROL EXPERIMENTS

What is left of the documents that weren't destroyed in 1973 gives us a small taste of what the ultimate race for control of the human mind was like. A state project that lasted more than 28 years officially mobilized virtually all government branches of the largest countries. It involved doctors, universities, scientists, companies, hospitals, penitentiaries, military agencies, intelligence agencies, among others.

With the imminent creation of the second greatest weapon ever conceived by mankind, billions of dollars were spent and tests and experiments of all kinds were conducted directly on human beings. The development of the dreadful electromagnetic weapons of today responsible for all kinds of human evils began: deaths, suicides, thefts of thought and intellectual property, massacres perpetrated by people affected by electronic torture — "Winter Soldiers" who are nothing more than the modern denomination of the 21st century Manchurian Candidates.

In this scenario a new type of war began to emerge: the Electronic Psy Warfare together with the creation of potential agents for various purposes, such as drugs and new weapons for unconventional warfare. At this stage of the book, the origins of the weapons we've seen throughout the previous volume will be revealed, with all the horrors committed during the process of conducting these experiments directly on humans. Since this theme is extremely vast, the subject has been summarized as far as possible, delimiting the course of experiments that are connected with modern psychotronic weapons.

The construction of scientific thinking makes use of the accumulation of knowledge and information passed down over generations. MKTECH followed this same precept, in which it was trapped like a time capsule in the form of documents that were hidden from everyone until they were disclosed to the public years ago. I came across these documents in my research while looking at the patterns of current experiments and the way they're conducted. Such documents show exactly why the experiments never stopped and where the torture with a clear bias of scientific experiment with several purposes comes from. That way, I got a glimpse of how it all started.

Until recently I'd never heard of such experiments. I only began to understand when I had direct contact with modern weapons and observed the negative power of interaction with a person's nervous system to a degree never imagined and the extensive experiments that are being conducted on people remotely these days. Keep in mind that this is an extremely extensive subject. The released documents alone add up to tens of thousands of pages that resemble the Nazi and Russian concentration camps in the mid-twentieth century, but torture is applied for scientific purposes, not political or racial ones.

Welcome to the origins of today's psychotronic weapons and the story behind it all.

Tests to try to directly control people's minds and understand how humans react to certain types of torture and violence began in Nazi concentration camps during World War II, where acts of atrocity — targeting data on how the prisoners would respond physically and psychologically to torture — were committed by sadistic scientists such as Josef Mengele. There, torture and interrogation techniques actually began with the scientific study showing that the work of doctors and scientists involved in mind control didn't spontaneously come out of nowhere.

The importation of Nazi doctors in the United States through secret programs like PAPERCLIP is part of the context. After the end of World War II, German scientists and technical experts were being held in detention camps. One of these Nazi doctors had previously conducted experiments using mescaline — a plant that contains high-potency psychedelic alkaloids — on prisoners in the Dachau concentration camps, as he was looking for an effective method of extracting confessions through a truth serum. His name was Kurt Friedrich Plötner.

The British, French, Americans and Russians engaged in highly competitive recruiting efforts to secure the services of such experts. The prospect of losing the scientists' scientific knowledge led to the creation of projects for the extraction and expatriation of German dissidents and their technology. More than 1,000 German scientists were secretly brought to the U. S. with the State Department's approval. The most famous individual was Werner von Braun, the rocket scientist.

Wernher Magnus Maximilian von Braun was best known for heading up the German V2 rocket program, Vergeltungswaffen, the "retaliatory weapons" — which terrorized Europe during the conflict period — and later for leading the development of rockets for the U. S. government. The NASA rocket that took Neil Armstrong to the moon was built by von Braun and his colleagues.

Doctors were also brought through the Paperclip Project as von Braun so they would be able to continue the experiments they had been carrying out in concentration camps, but under the tutelage of the United States Department of Defense (DOD). With the onset of the Cold War between Russian communism and American capitalism shortly after World War II, in the mid-1950s, a secret and innovative battle for mind control began. Even then the Russians were well advanced in research into prisoner brainwashing, torture and mind control using invasive methods. This is because the Soviets have been working and developing experiments on mind control as of 1911. Since 1867, the famous psychiatrist Y. L. Ohotrovich (Ю.Л.Охотрович) developed hypnotic magnetic therapy based on the theory of animal magnetism. According to Ohotrovich, all living animals emit a magnetic field of organic origin. Various theories and primary experiments with mental suggestions and mind reading, magnetic fields and their effects on the mind have been studied.

In the post-Russian revolution, between 1917 and 1937, control programs with electricity and electromagnetic waves, involving theories of distance telepathy, thought transmission and the study of the brain, together with mental control techniques, were put into practice to test a series of theories relating to the field of bioelectricity.

Some of the various experiments documented between 1931 and 1937 that were under the tutelage of the USSR (the Soviet Union) stood out from the rest. One of them theorized on how to send information to the brain of a human (telepathy) using rustic equipment, however, it sought concretely the feasibility of transferring biological information. In order to measure the magnitude of this particular experiment and its importance to the government, the best Soviet centers were made available to conduct the tests, such as in Leningrad at the Bechterev's Brain Institute and in Moscow at the Laboratory of Biophysics, Academy of Science.

During this period of research, in an attempt to find "telepathic radiation" and thus transfer information to the brain, several phenomena were found in the search process between the emission of electromagnetic waves and some nerve activities in the brain, in particular interactions with microwaves that were discovered by the scientist B. G. Michaylovskiy (Б.Г.Михайловский). Nevertheless, telepathic radiation itself has never been found as theorized.

This is how these tests directed Soviet pre-war programs. In this sense, the interaction between electromagnetic waves and their effects on specific areas in the brain and on biological tissues became the goal. Variation of results based on how each brain area absorbed this radiation and its subsequent effects on cognition and emotions were analyzed. In the same experiment, they tried to answer questions related to how each band of the electromagnetic spectrum was able to affect different living organisms, turning into subtopics to be explored within the tests.

All the important research and results were confidential. Only S. J. Turlygn — a research scientist — published a summary of the results of these researches that theorized advanced interactions in the field of microwave radiation with humans in the 1940s. If someone theorizes that this sort of thing is possible, someone will inevitably test whether or not it is actually feasible, right?

There were two scientists directly involved in the research that greatly helped in directing investigations in this field. The first was Dr. Leonid Vaseliev, Head of the Department at the University of Leningrad, who was active in research in the field of parapsychology, leading to many experiments in thought transference through electronic telepathy. The search for this type of phenomenon revealed valuable data in the discovery of electrical potentials of the brain (EEG), or that gave rise to the electroencephalogram. The continuation of his studies by the fellow Russian psychiatrist Hans Berger brought good results. A 1976 publication on his work entitled Remote Influence showed how it was possible to remotely influence the human brain in several different areas, such as motor and visual functions, affecting sleep/wakefulness stages and changes in electrodermal activities.

Even with classified Russian files, we can now confirm that the Soviets pioneered mind control tests. These studies constitute the source of information for the execution of torture techniques by the secret police from that period, such as the NKVD (People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs — Народный комиссариат внутренних дел), conducted in detainees of the most diverse nationalities in its numerous prison camps. These secret police are the same that gave rise to the famous KGB in 1954.

One of the first results of the new Russian brainwashing and manipulation techniques occurred at the beginning of World War II in trials of prisoners who were political opponents of the regime. The event became known as the Moscow Trials. In 1938, Josef Stalin's opponents had confessions extracted from them under torture, coercion and blackmail in prisons and facilities where they were located. During the trials they confessed that they'd committed the crime of conspiring against the October Revolution of which they were accused. However, what caught the attention of the whole world was the way in which the convicted individuals confessed their participation in the crime: in an extremely voluntary, calm and unnatural way, in addition to the acceptance in knowing that they would be executed. Then, the question arose: did the Russians discover the technique to manipulate the human mind?

Another case that drew attention was that of Cardinal Jozsef Mindszenty, who was fiercely opposed to communism and its ideology in Hungary. His case has been considered one of the most successful dezinformatsiya<sup>43</sup> operations in Russian history. Mindszenty was arrested by the Hungary's State Security Agency, the AVO (Allamvedelmi Osztaly), on December 26, 1948. He was imprisoned for 39 days and was forced to wear a clown outfit. The guards spent night and day laughing, talking loudly, telling sick jokes and smoking in an unventilated place on the outskirts of his cell. Every night Mindszenty was beaten until he passed out, but the guards wouldn't let him sleep after the acts. Drugs were administered in his food on a daily basis and he also underwent systematic interrogations. He was slandered, framed<sup>44</sup> with fake documents, judged in a show trial and convicted of being an American spy (under confession), of conspiring against the Soviet regime and attempting to start a Third World War. Advanced brainwashing torture techniques were used by the secret police. Mindszenty said he was so exhausted physically and mentally that he barely knew what he was saying or doing. Once again absurd confessions of crimes that the Cardinal clearly couldn't have committed caught the attention of intelligence agencies. The documents pointed out that the Soviets — in addition to being at the forefront of an advanced program in interrogation and mind control techniques — had already managed to create false and confusing memories in certain prisoners.

The last case that finally woke up American intelligence to what was happening was during the Korean War, in which American soldiers trapped in combat became human subjects for brainwashing experiments. The episode took place during a confession made in front of the camera in which the prisoners admitted the use of biological weapons to attack Korea. The confession, however, wasn't true as soldiers never bombed Korea with biological weapons. It was then that the Americans tried to find out how the Russians managed to generate such a result in order to replicate it later in American subjects, that is, in their own citizens. Many questions remained in the air: how was it done? How to coerce people into confessing crimes for the lies of the Soviet government. It's the use of communication and information techniques to mislead, deceive or give a false image of reality, by suppressing or hiding information, minimizing its importance or modifying its meaning. Its purpose is to deceive public opinion in order to protect private or political interests.

<sup>44</sup> Framed/Framing is a specialty of Soviet disinformation. It consists of changing a person's past by inverting their characteristics and the way the public perceives them, transforming the villain into a hero or vice versa. In other words, you must slander your enemies as having been pro-Nazis or pro-Fascists whenever possible. A core of truth is used to create slanderous and defamatory stories. For this, the target's entire contact network, intimacy and routine are studied. Original documents are used to forge fake ones with true characteristics.

they didn't commit? How to make prisoners believe that they really committed the crime?

The military and the CIA assumed that the people named in these events had their minds manipulated directly through some hitherto unknown technique of mental persuasion, leading to suspicion that Russia had found mechanisms that turned a human into a kind of robot that obeys orders without question and would be capable of committing crimes without knowing or remembering what they were doing at the time. Nevertheless, confirmation and detailed study of the results of these advanced techniques that these methods were being implemented came only when other Americans taken prisoner during the Korean War returned. Many of them had symptoms of brainwashing, temporary lapse in memory, multiple personalities, among other disorders. Another similar event occurred in 1960, when the spy pilot Gary Powers was captured and confessed that he worked for the CIA — one more fact that referred to the efficiency of the Soviet project at the time.

The CIA released 800,000 files with 13 million pages of secret documents from various operations over the years until the 1990s. From that date on, documents linked to intelligence remained confidential. The documents make it clear that Russia was always ahead in the matter of Intelligence. The CIA, for example, didn't know about its main enemy, the USSR. So, the agency was taken by surprise due to Stalin's death in 1953. They had no information about his successor Nikita Khrushchev.

The CIA has declassified around 18,000 pages of documents about the extensive mind control program started in the 1950s, which can be searched by anyone. One of the documents from Subproject 61 MK-ULTRA shows the CIA's interest in the subject of mind control along with military funds to execute experiments with implants in the brains of human subjects. In the beginning, the use of electrodes and implants was the only way to control the victim's mind.

“The CIA was interested in this phenomenon after the return of some American POWs from the Korean War who were taken into the custody of the communist police and had their minds destroyed with the use of torture and brainwashing”.

Given the new current scenario on the development of something capable of altering the minds of prisoners with the new geopolitical situation, in order not to be left behind in this new field of study — which seemed to be the most promising of recent times —, the project BLUE BIRD was started. It was approved by the CIA director on April 20, 1950 with the intention of kick-starting mind-control experiments in humans. This would be the embryo of the greatest mind study project of all time, the MK-ULTRA. Some questions about the program were promptly raised by the directors and those involved, for example:

- * Can we induce people — in a matter of hours or days — by using advanced hypnosis to take actions against their will and for our own benefit?
- * Can we use people to commit acts such as attacks on aircraft, sabotage of public transportation (subways, trains, etc.) and cars?
- * Is it possible to use temporal amnesia methods and hypnosis techniques to force the target to travel long distances, commit specific acts, and return to us with sensitive documents and materials?
- * Can we guarantee total amnesia under any conditions?
- * Can we change a person's personality?
- * Is it possible to hide sleep-inducing chemicals in items for human consumption (e.g., cigarettes, teas, beers, pills)?
- * Can we conduct experiments that make an individual act against their principles and their moral archetypes?

With this set of inquiries in hand, the CIA began its testing journey toward the goal of fully understanding and mastering the field of mind control.

In August 1951, the project was renamed ARTICHOKE. Bluebird and Artichoke have included a great deal of work on amnesia through torture, trying to use hypnosis as a way to generate personalities in order to create a programmed killer — The Manchurian Candidate — who would be an easy-to-manipulate agent and able to carry out any orders given to them. They would turn anyone into a programmed assassin so they could work as a CIA agent without knowing it.

Another objective of the Artichoke Project would be to develop more efficient interrogation techniques to the point of brainwashing the tortured person and getting as much information as possible. In order to achieve these primary goals, it'd be necessary to study the human brain and human behavior in detail; to formulate drugs such as the "truth serum" to persuade interrogation prisoners to tell the whole truth by taking people to a state of absolute suggestion; to create temporal amnesia; to conduct all kinds of experiments and test substances in order to fully understand their role in the central nervous system and find out which of these new chemical agents could be useful for the program.

The development and monitoring of all segments linked to human cognition in this process needed to be scientifically cataloged with the intention of achieving the primary goals, such as implanting false memories and creating multiple personalities. For this they should make use of various substances, a combination between them, in addition to cataloging its effects and consequences on humans. The details of the programs were kept secret even from other professionals inside the CIA.

More than 3,000 documents were released on just a few incidents of MK-ULTRA due to the Freedom of Information Act, a detailed demonstration of how thorough the experiments were. These documents described the horrors suffered by human subjects, equipment requests and contracts with large companies to supply substances for the tests, cataloging tortures and experiments with humans of all kinds, and the results obtained in the process. During the course of this chapter, I'm going to present a summary about this time period. Although I know that it'd take a separate book to cover all the information contained in it, I've summarized the data as much as possible. If you're interested in going deeper in the subject, you can check the documents in the public domain. They're available to everyone.

Operation Artichoke involved the detailed, systematic creation of specific techniques to develop amnesia, new identities, hypnotically implanted codes, and activity triggers to perform a particular action remotely. An Artichoke document dated January 7, 1953 presents how this whole scheme worked. In this particular case, it shows ways to create programmed killers, as Dr. Coling Ross found:

“Some techniques included doping someone with Phenobarbital, turning on the lie detector, injecting intravenous drugs so that the individual would stay awake but in a state of suggestion. Then, false memories were introduced through interrogation. This was repeated over and over again until a story which was unconsciously interpreted as true was created in the subject's mind. Later, the false story/memory was described by the subject and they easily passed the lie detector test. Other techniques consisted of chemical brainwashing with sensory deprivation, causing the victim to be activated by a radio signal that only they would hear. It'd be a trigger to activate another personality, thus performing certain tasks without remembering them later. This creates the dissociative amnesia. Several tests with these assumptions were carried out for three years in a row.”

- * Implementation of new identities activated by some secret code (such as a radio signal);
- * Fabrication of memory lapses and amnesia, so the victim doesn't remember the acts performed;
- * Use of subjects in tests with controlled conditions and in the field.

Hypnosis wasn't the only method devised by doctors to create electroshock-controlled amnesia in the brain; drugs, magnetic fields, sound waves, sleep deprivation, isolation and many other methods have been studied.

At this stage, the use of hallucinogenic substances such as Amanita muscaria, Amanita pantherina and Amanita phalloides was exhaustively tested, as well as other alkaloids and fungi to search for techniques that included hypnosis to implement controlled temporal amnesia (which would be invaluable for operations), and combinations of various substances such as Scopolamine together with Amobarbital or Sodium Amytal administered in different doses for numerous purposes, including epilepsy induction to create advanced interrogation techniques and subdue human guinea pigs.

4.1 - MK-ULTRA

Artichoke and Bluebird were officially renamed MK-ULTRA by the CIA on April 13, 1953. The experiments became broader in scope, as they diversified the activities to various fields linked to mind control. It maintained the original goals, but with more in-depth knowledge of the topic.

MK-ULTRA is divided into 150 different subprojects, each with a particular objective and sharing data and results with each other. One group, for example, was responsible for testing and developing drugs that would directly control the minds of human subjects. Another group was responsible for developing similar techniques through electromagnetism. One of the goals was to produce components that had no color or smell and created partial or total amnesia and completely altered the human psyche. It was then that LSD began to be introduced into the studies.

LSD, or more precisely LSD25, is a pure white, crystalline compound that occurs naturally as a result of the metabolic reactions of the fungus Claviceps purpurea, which results in the alkaloid. In 1943, Swiss chemist Albert Hofmann, while working at Sandoz, "accidentally" discovered the complex and varied effects of the synthetic chemical which he became an enthusiast until his death at age 102.

LSD produces a very strong psychoactive reaction. It alters the cognitive mechanics of the brain, causing external and internal sensory stimuli to be interpreted in an abnormal way. In this context, depending on various external and internal aspects, it can lead a person to happiness and euphoria with a deep contemplative thought about the world and its mysteries, or it can trigger a terrible bad trip, in which the substance enhances every bad thought, leading the person to despair, depression, mental confusion, persecutory paranoia, etc. It was precisely this ability to profoundly alter the functioning of the mind that the CIA was seeking as a component, which would be used as a potentiating agent for "bad trips" in interrogations and in mind control experiments.

An emblematic feature of LSD is that it can make a person analyze memories without the scrutiny of emotional modulation, that is, to analyze such memories separately and in a timeless way; or it could be the other way around: memories can acquire an intense emotional charge, generating the opposite effect. Another striking feature of LSD is its ability to alter auditory perception, modifying the way sound is interpreted by the auditory cortex.

Some Top-Secret classification level documents showed how companies like Eli Lilly received $400,000 in 1954 to manufacture a large amount of LSD for the CIA. Others show the connection of various psychiatric institutions across the United States and other countries linked to MK-ULTRA and the CIA, as if they were a kind of agreement, further expanding the range of human guinea pigs and increasing the amount of data collected.

The program was gaining momentum around the world. It quickly obtained positive results in several fields of studies. Pioneer Russia was very advanced in the field and implemented its own MK-ULTRA, as well as China, Cuba and Korea. England, Canada and other countries also had their own MK-ULTRA projects or a connection with the American program.

Several subprojects have specialized in certain areas of mind control knowledge. All torture techniques could be tested in the field in order to observe the direct consequences on humans, thus qualifying which techniques were most effective. Everything was impeccably cataloged and stored in an old database: in sheets of paper. Amongst the techniques were some of the horrors black people, prostitutes, the mentally ill, beggars, inmates, immigrants and minorities in general — that were the main subjects of the entire experiment — went through. Many victims were tested under the influence of drugs and were never identified or compensated for the damage caused to them.

The drugs used in MK-ULTRA were aimed at altering the functions of the human brain and manipulating its mental state. Such drugs were used without the knowledge or consent of those to whom they were administered. In fact, one of the objectives of the project was to develop ways to administer such substances without the victim's knowledge.

Evidence published through the release of only part of the MK-ULTRA Project documents indicates that the research involved the use of animals and various types of drugs. However, it has led the industry to develop and test drugs on human beings without having to go through the normal human testing process.

Below are some data on the scale obtained by the war effort at the time for the torture experiments that recruited around 80 renowned institutions, such as 44 universities working directly/indirectly (knowingly or not, and for what purpose they were working), 12 psychiatric hospitals — such hospitals did know what was happening —, and 185 private research institutes.

MK-ULTRA continued with its official schedule until June 7, 1964. During this period, several experiments were conducted, as we're going to see in the next pages.

4.1.1 - The Experiments

In order to brainwash (completely or temporary) the countless human subjects chosen for the experiments, several invasive techniques were used to bring people to a state of complete disorientation, to remove any logical thinking, to make them weak, subdued and capable of being mentally modified. The acts of torture perpetrated by the tormentors of the time had a purpose: to answer the questions mentioned before and to improve what already existed in the context of the total knowledge of the human brain. The largest experiment in human history based on torture for scientific purposes had begun. The intention was to create suicides or programmed killers through the ingestion of drugs and hypnosis techniques. The experiments had the ultimate aim of studying how to control human behavior, thinking and emotions, using all available means to do so. And this maxim extends to the present day.

Electric shock to sensitive parts of the body, sense deprivation, sleep deprivation, confinement in boxes or coffins with small openings, all kinds of psychological and physical abuse. Extremes of heat and cold, including submersion in ice water and burning chemicals on the skin and eyes (e.g., Agent Orange); blinding light near the eyes; forced ingestion of bodily fluids; hanging them in painful or upside-down positions; keeping the victim hungry or thirsty for days, weeks or months; isolation of perception – making them not feel their senses (sight, hearing, touch, taste and smell); pulling or dislocating the upper and lower limbs; fainting tests involving carotid pressure, and so on.

Drugs were used to create illusion, confusion and amnesia, often given by intravenous injection; ingestion or use of intravenous toxic chemicals to cause pain or illness, including chemotherapeutic agents. They also used snakes, spiders, larvae, rodents and other animals to provoke fear, disgust and horror, and tested the reaction to substances secreted by those animals in the bloodstream and central nervous system.

Near-death experiences, commonly suffocation or drowning with immediate resuscitation; victims were forced to witness abuse, torture of people and animals. Threats to family, friends and loved ones, to force the achievement of certain goals were also exhaustively tested. Besides this, they changed the victim's personality by using LSD and all kinds of psychoactive drugs to see which left them more susceptible to hypnosis and thus “remove” the person's personality to insert a new one.

Taking this into consideration, some subprojects have specialized in researching new chemical agents with potential for military purposes in order to create weapons, including the “truth serum” and programmed killers. Truth serum is the term used to refer to a drug or a set of drugs that given to a suspect or patient who has something important to hide would force them to reveal such hidden information through suppression and even elimination of their will power. Several drugs were used for this purpose. The most common and known are scopolamine and sodium thiopental.

There was also the search for chemical agents efficient in causing confusion and amnesia, the insertion of memories based on a “fictitious reality” that was created from several torture sessions to later examine whether these realities were instilled in the subject's mind using the polygraph as a test. Also, use of substances and torture techniques such as:

- * Belladonna (one of the most toxic plants);
- * Morphine;
- * Nerve gases;
- * Atropine;
- * Mescaline;
- * Anesthetic gases;
- * Nitrous oxide - commonly known as laughing gas;
- * Animal toxin tests;
- * Tests with paralyzing fish toxins that affect the nervous system;
- * Attempt to reduce chronic pain and later reactivate it in order to cause sudden intense pain;
- * Activation and inactivation of epileptic seizures that momentarily cloud the memory and cause extreme feelings of intimidation;
- * Antihistamine (Anti-allergy) to cause emotional sensitivity in children and adults;
- * Pyridoxine (Vitamin B6);
- * Use of carbon dioxide indoors at various levels (30%, 40% and 80%), provoking changes in consciousness levels;

- * Amphetamines and other substances used together to create the perfect brainwashing;
- * More efficient drugs to induce deep sleep and alter the properties of the nucleus of the amygdala;
- * Stimulation of certain brain regions with electrical current, ultrasound and other means by using radiant energy and interspersing it with x-rays;
- * Surgical removals of parts of the brain like the cerebral amygdala responsible for emotions;
- * Analgesic drugs were synthesized with the intention of taking away the pain without altering consciousness, as morphine did;
- * Bulbocapnine is an alkaloid found in Corydalis (Papaveraceae) used to inhibit the reflex of motor activities in order to cause catatonic states — such as catatonic schizophrenia in some respects —, but temporarily. Small doses of bulbocapnine produce a state of tranquility and stillness that includes a certain degree of suggestibility and systematic torture;
- * Combination of various brainwashing techniques;
- * Degradation of mental states to weaken the will to live and the motivation that moves human beings in their daily lives;
- * Chlorpromazine (an antipsychotic medication, a prototype in the treatment of schizophrenic patients);
- * Use of carbon dioxide (CO<sub>2</sub>) to produce a cataleptic state — in which the patient's limbs remain in whatever position was assigned to them by others;
- * Injection of cocaine derivatives directly into the frontal lobe producing free and spontaneous conversations;
- * Use of botulinum toxin in several cases. This is a neurotoxin produced by the bacterium Clostridium botulinum that causes decreased muscle action when injected;
- * Use of Cohoba, Yopo or DMT (highly hallucinogenic drugs);
- * Classical conditioning (Pavlovian or respondent conditioning), and constant reconditioning;

- * Integrated tests for response at all levels, conscious and unconscious;
- * Tests were combined with deprivation techniques and most of them would aim to improve the efficiency of the interrogation and collection of cause-and-effect information, food deprivation, sleep and sensory deprivation, water deprivation, and so on;
- * Tests were always followed by a medical and scientific board that indicated the mental state produced by each deprivation or the set of them and the physical and psychological consequences observed;
- * Creation and use of Amobarbital (sodium amytal), Sodium Pentothal (thiopental) and Secobarbital (Seconal);
- * Use of hypnosis and violent electroshocks to the brain;
- * Tests with hospitalized patients in order to change the personality of an enemy agent before they return to their original personality with no recollection of what they've said;
- * Alcohol;
- * Barbiturates;
- * Amphetamines;
- * Chemical lobotomy to replace usual lobotomy;
- * Combined tests and hardships to the majority in order to improve interrogation techniques;
- * Plant toxins with Pyridoxine;
- * Ultrasound tests ("sleep ray") – electroshock to reach the sleep control center;
- * They considered the use of atomic particles for this purpose;
- * Tests with Rauwolfia with LSD-25 and electroshock;
- * Polygraph used to detect physiological changes during testimonies with the use of sedatives that lead to induction of seizures;
- * Psychic driving – torture technique in which the human guinea pig is subjected to an audio containing a message repeated in a loop 24/7 until their behavior completely changes, generating erratic and anomalous actions, modifying their personality and creating an emotional trigger that can drag on for years;

- * Ultrasonic Techniques – to destroy the physical balance of the bulb and cerebellum of the brainstem using sonic weapons with frequencies of 2,000 Hz for 30 minutes at 140 to 150 db;
- * Vibration – to cause fluctuations in the environment with low-frequency sound waves below what the human hearing is capable of detecting in order to make the person feel lost — to make them "drift", potentiating emotional problems and facilitating the acquisition of information; creating the false illusion of superiority on the part of the torturers over the victim;
- * Twilight Sleep – an amnesic state that is characterized by insensitivity to pain without loss of consciousness, induced by an injection of morphine and scopolamine;
- * Brainwashing – total isolation for long periods that produces a state of apathy, lack of purpose;
- * Flicker – stroboscopic oscillation to create induced epilepsy or tests with induced seizures for various purposes. One of them is to create a physical and psychological persuasion agent for anyone, which could be used later as a severe threat to the individual being questioned and thus convince the subject of the seriousness of the event. Reports say that tests combined with electroshock at various voltages to induce epilepsy caused some human subjects to bite so hard due to the pain that they broke their jaws in the process. All kinds of electroshock tests were conducted and various reactions tested in order to create a temporary (controlled) amnesia.

The documents show in detail how the experiments were conducted and the purpose of each test with their respective substances. There are thousands of pages. If you want to go deeper, I suggest that you access these documents. Here I just mentioned some torture techniques employed in the nearly 25 years of MK-ULTRA's existence. There is no doubt that the data collection results for a new war to come has been achieved.

More study seems worthwhile.

CORTISONE & ACTH

Cortisone may sensitize to convulsion, or convulse, persons who take it over a considerable period of time; it is given by physicians for a number of chronic illnesses — chiefly chronic arthritis, and chronic asthma — so that if a Subject has been taking it, his convulsive threshold may be appreciably lower than normal.

ACTH (adrenocorticotrophic hormone) stimulates the body's production of Cortisone, along with some other effects. The Cortisone-effect, as above, might interest us.

Neither of these would be used actually to sensitize or to convulse, for our purposes. They would be too slow, and would involve a number of (complications) very undesirable.

See Brainwashing. See also SEDATIVE DEPRIVATIONS; & DEPRIVATION OF FOOD, QUANTITATIVE.

Deprivations of dietary components, and Alterations of physical environments, can also be applied over a period of time (without other brainwashing stresses)/weaken a Subject non-specifically (#14), i.e., to make him more easily fatigued and to lower his resistance generally.

Specifically desirable mental states should be sought, in addition to a non-specific (#14) weakening of the Subject which would lower his resistance and make him more easily fatigued.

Mentioned under Brainwashing, is the drowsiness-tendency (#10) produced by a mild degree of starvation.

Under Sensitizing to Convulsion (page 2) is a list of biochemical and dietary means that may so act, viz.

4.1.2 - Experiments conducted in Canada

The experiments carried out in Canada have ruined many people's lives. One of those directly responsible for running the program, Dr. D. Ewen Cameron, conducted a series of mind control experiments under the direct authority of the CIA on more than 53 people — all patients seeking treatment at the Allan Memorial Institute of McGill University between 1957 and 1961.

Selected patients were treated with high doses of LSD for 63 consecutive days and with electroshock therapy 75 times greater than that commonly used in patients. In order to mold new personalities, Cameron forced his patients to listen to the same message for 16 hours straight. This form of torture is known as psychic driving. Cameron and the CIA were interested in testing brainwashing and the individual's ability to redirect thoughts and actions.

Patients never authorized this type of procedure and were never informed that they were part of a large research study. A son of a victim who went through the program in Canada told a newspaper that his father, who was an independent, intelligent and caring person, became a completely different individual. Every time he was visited at the hospital, his father didn't speak much. When he did, he talked gibberish. If he wasn't sleeping, he was drowsy. The son talked to the father and noticed that he had no more memories — they seemed to have been erased. He also acted strangely, performing actions without remembering what he did or where he was. Later, in the 1980s, some victims went to Court and received compensation from the government of Canada.

The author and psychiatrist Harvey Weinstein established the direct relationship of mind control research done in England by the British psychiatrist William Sargant, involved in MK-ULTRA research in England, with Ewen Cameron's experiments in Canada, also for MK-ULTRA and with methods currently used as means of torture (for example, the use of hallucinogenic drugs, chemical agents, and sleep deprivation). Ewen Cameron often had the collaboration of William Sargant, both of whom were linked to CIA experiments.
